PEPPERDINE SCHOOL OF PUBLIC POLICY

SEPTEMBER 2020 VIRTUAL EVENTS

SEPTEMBER

Engagement During Pandemic Uncertainties

10 AM

The pandemic has inspired a number of creative solutions to encourage virtual engagement, connection, and a sense of community. Who are the people that have started these initiatives? How can you bring those initiatives to your local community?

2020 Constitution Day Lecture

12 PM

Join nationally-recognized expert in the American founding and SPP professor emeritus, Dr. Gordon Llovd as he provides a more comprehensive vision of how we should remember this profound document in ways that should impact today's polarized political climate. Joining him in conversation will be School of Public Policy dean, Pete Peterson.

A Policy Platform for Communitarian Conservatism

9:30 AM

Often seen as a nostalgic pining for the past, and framed both philosophically and historically, a reimagined communitarian conservatism requires an actual set of policies in order to be realistically considered by the broader public. In this third webinar in our "Quest for Community" series, we welcome four public policy experts to explore this important conversation as we move from theory to practice.

Path Back to School: Best Practices & Special Education

11 AM

Join us for the fourth episode in our Path Back to School webinar series, focused on Best Practices & Special Education. Our panelists will discuss successful practices from the field during distance learning to provide listeners with actionable ideas for the coming school year. A section of the conversation will be dedicated to special education as continuity of special education programming has been a common area of concern in these challenging times.

Thursday, September 17, 2020 -Thursday, October 8, 2020

Noted Christian author and intellectual, Os Guinness, describes the concept of "calling" as finding "the ultimate why" for our lives. A perspective that has both secular and Christian roots, Guinness helps us understand our calling in his important book, The Call.

Join dean Pete Peterson as he leads a fourweek study on the book, speaking from personal experience about how this "new pair of glasses" can help us see our lives and future career choices in new ways. While the book and this study will focus more on the Christian origins of calling, this study is open to all students, faculty, and staff.

Registration is limited. All who register should commit to making the four sessions. and each will receive a free copy of the book.
